DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The William P. Bruehl residence, located on 131 Church Lane, is a rectangular one and a half stories high stone house. It has a gable roof with two interior end chimneys and four dormers on its north facade, being an addition after the roof was raised in 1928.

The front or north facade is four bays wide on the first floor with two 6/6 double hung windows on the extreme east and west side. There are two flat with tramson four panel central doors covered by a modern aluminum porch with iron columns. The location and amount of doors are the evidence that once two families lived there.

The second floor of this north facade is four bays wide with four dormers containing 6/6 windows. These dormers were not part of the original house, the original ones being four small knee windows. According to Mrs. Bruehl, the small size of this windows was one of the reasons why the roof was raised.

The east and west sides of the house contain no windows, being a characteristic of the majority of the stone houses in the neighborhood.

The back or south side of the residence has a concrete block addition, two bays wide with a wood panel door towards the southwest side and a 3/3 double hung window towards the southeast side.

On the backyard there is an asbestos siding rectangular shed. It is five bays wide with one 2/2 double hung window on its northeast side and a four wood panel door. It is followed by a 3/3 double hung window, an asbestos covered door and another 3/3 double hung windows. There is no fenestration on either the east or west sides of the shed.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This house is important because it represents one of Maryland's typical construction techniques, the stone house. It is also important because being located in an area where quarries are abundant, the stone for the building probably came from one of the local quarries.

Yet another reason is that this house is an important component of the nineteenth century streetscape of the village of Texas.
